

THE MIND MYSTERIES OF SCOTT XAVIER

Some magicians pull rabbits out of hats...

Others, Paranormalists, excel beyond the traditional sleight of hand and elevate into a category of entertainment that challenges the boundaries of reality...

Scott Xavier - is one of the latter.

"I always hated the balloon clown magicians growing up," says Scott Xavier, "I like the unusual stuff that you hear about on television. The stuff that makes you uneasy and on edge. The stuff that just works even though no one knows whether it is real or not."

Scott Xavier of Plainfield, Illinois has showcased his stunts to corporate audiences all across the world. A self-described "paranormalist," Scott Xavier combines elements of psychology, illusion, and theater to create a spectacle in which the audience is his chief prop!

"I like creating an interactive environment where the freaky and strange demonstrations are happening in the audience and not to me," says Scott, who has been performing in nightclubs, colleges, and corporate events - he is also the corporate magician for Jamba juice - for about 5 years.

His techniques range from mental guessing games and hypnosis to crowd pleasing stunts, such as psychokinetic spoon bending and mind reading.

"There's a lot of twists and curves that are for everyone when I perform," he says.

Scott Xavier's show leaves traditional magic tricks behind and focuses on more elaborate schemes of popular psychology, verbal & non-verbal communication, intuition, & the paranormal.

"It's real mind reading! I can tell by the way someone's eyes wobble or by the direction their eyes are looking whether they are lying or not," he says. "By using clues such as this - and being observant - I can create some unique psychological demonstrations of mind reading and thought transference."

He says he has spent countless hours studying psychological techniques that allow him to guide people's thoughts and be attuned to subliminal clues that might reveal what they're thinking.
